Take A Stand

Lesson for May 17, 964

The Bible was written in a simpler era than ours. Many people would think the Bible world ideal. At least it would seem like a world which lacked many of what are now often considered sources of human evils. It was a rural world: in Palestine there were comparatively few cities and none would be recognized as such today. It was a world where alcoholic drinks were everywhere used even by the best people. It was a time before the invention of whiskey and other beverages high in alcholic content. Drinking was confined to wines and beer or their equivalent. It was an age without motor cars or machinery, a leisurely hand-crafting age. Yet even in that world, the writers of the Bible had something to say about drinking. The point of all this is: If alcholic drinks were known to be dangerous in a simple rural world, how much more dangerous it can be in our complex civilization!

The speed of the problem

There was once a stage magician who used to say over and over as he was doing his stuff, "It's the speed of the problem and not the problem itself." Something like that is true of the world we live in. This has a great deal to do with the alcohol problem. For instance: Time was when men would gather in taverns or at parties, just as they do today; and some of them would get drunk, as many do today. But when the party was over, in the good old days the friends of the man who had had too much would dump him into his wagon and get the horses started. That animal knew his way home and being sober knew enough not to speed. (Did you ever hear of horses organizing a race meet by themselves?) But nowadays — whoosh! That noise you heard was the sound of our friend who was just telling us that one more drink couldn't do any harm. He took off in his highpowered car and he's likely to be a statistic by morning. There's nothing funny about this. It happens. Now the stories reported don't always tell the whole truth; but the police will tell you if you ask them that alcohol figures in many smash-ups on the highways.

It is said often that the real problem is not drinking itself, but in the question: What drives men to create for themselves a drinking problem? Again the speed of our civilization has something to do with it. The intensity of competition, tension on the highways, tensions at the home, the sense of being pushed all the time, get on a man's nerves and he starts to drink just a little more and a little oftener than he would have otherwise; and the first thing he knows, he has all the worries that pushed him at the outset, but he has the alcohol problem besides. Temporary problem does not you find is (perhaps unconsciously) expressing hate and contempt for the kind of civilization he is forced to live in. Rather than continue to try to work for a better kind of life, he tells the world a rude, crude farewell, all he thinks of is to get out. So he takes the route of temporary suicide. There's no essential difference between a man who seeks refuge in alcohol and one who seeks refuge in opium or marijuana.

Well, somebody says, you are talking about alcoholics. Yes, and more besides. Alcoholism — if we call it a disease — is a disease more widely spread than any other disease in America, except three and perhaps all of alcoholics is increasing yearly.

Couple Met -- Wed At Time Of Surrender, 1865

April 9, 1865 was a momentous day both for the nation and for various individuals. For Mary Mildred Nowlin and Robert Terry Totty it was the beginning of romance. Totty, a veteran of both the Confederate Army and Confederate Navy was in Appomattox at the time of the Surrender. Here he met Miss Nowlin. Appomattox resident. Their daughter, Mrs. Ruth Eugenia Totty Perkinson, of Richmond died in March of this year in Richmond at the age of eighty. Mrs. Perkinson's son, Herbert R. Perkinson, Jr., sent this interesting bit of local history to the TIMES-VIRGINIAN.

(Mrs. Perkinson's parents met at the time of the Civil War surrender there in Appomattox. Her father, Mr. Totty, was there as a service man while her mother was a resident of Appomattox at the time.)

Pastor Speaks

The Substance of Faith

The above title appeared in a pictorial recently by Dr. Porter Routh. Because of its relevant value, I would like to use it in "toto" for the Pastor's Word this week.

"Helmut Thelicke in his book Man In Gods World tells of an experience during his ministry in Stuttgart, Germany, during World War II. He had been limited in his ministry by the Nazis, but the people continued to come.

After an air attack I was helping with the clean-up operations and was standing at the edge of a huge crater opened up by an aerial bomb. It had killen an officer and 36 women auxiliary air force aids. A woman came up to me —she was the wife of the officer who had been killed — and asked whether I was Helmut Thelicke. For I was covered with dust and grime and she did not recognize me at first. She then showed me her husband's cap and said, 'This is all that was left of him. Only last Thursday I was with him, attending your lecture. And now I want to thank you for preparing him for his death! Then she quietly shook my hand.

'What were we doing there teaching theology in the face of death. There the only thing that was left to help us all was the gospel itself. Everything else simply dissolved into thin air. We were living only upon the 'Substance" of our faith. And these desperate hours also helped us to find that substance.'

The bot war has given away to the cold war. The destructive rockets of the hot war has given away to the inquisitive rockets of the cold war. Automation continues to drain man of his dignity, and to lose him of its demanding organization.

Modern man has ed by the glitter and FORM when the heart is for the substance found in SUBSTANCE sign new packages, visualization of eternal ship. Like Thomas will not believe unless We must not allow tion, God in his infinite the supreme by his own person in the man — even Jesus Lo, the revalation was not to reflect the but to reveal his infinite love — the substance faith.

"The substance of be found in the Jew The disturbing realm time is the knowledge go through the form and yet they have a they are unloved and turn, are unlovely.

The central need fa is to somehow relate an ce, which alone can Christ of Calvary.
